THE PURGING SANSEVIERIAS OF SIKSHANAMANDIRA

A Sappy Prologue

Sansevieria is a historically recognized genus of flowering plants, native to Africa, notably Madagascar, and southern Asia. There is great variation within the species placed in the genus; they range from succulent desert plants such as Dracaena pinguicula to thinner leafed tropical plants such as Dracaena trifasciata. Plants often form dense clumps from a spreading rhizome or stolons. The leaves of Sansevieria are typically arranged in a rosette around the growing point, although some species are distichous. The flowers of Sansevieria are usually greenish-white, also rose, lilac-red, brownish, produced on a simple or branched raceme. The fruit is a red or orange berry. In nature, they are pollinated by moths, but both flowering and fruiting are erratic and few seeds are produced. The raceme is derived from the apical meristem, and a flowered shoot no longer produces new leaves. The flowered shoot continues to grow by producing plantlets via its rhizomes or stolons.
