(19th August, 2019 to 29th August, 2019)

Workshop Objectives

Learning a language doesn't mean the acquisition of literary craftsmanship, on the contrary, to know a language of present means to be effectively competent in various communication skills. Considering the growing demand of English language and related soft skills and the crucial significance of English language as a tool for global communication, the present workshop aims to develop and enhance the linguistic and communicative competence of the learners. The focus is on honing the skills of reading, listening, speaking and writing, classroom management and continuing professional development (CPD) for English language teachers.

Workshop Methodology

- Participant - centred approach with group and pair work.
- Brainstorming
- Group Interaction

Outcome Expectancies

- To discuss attitudes towards teaching reading, listening, speaking, writing and other soft skills.
- Skills in effective classroom management are central to teaching and require consistency, a sense of fairness and courage. These skills also require that teachers must understand the psychological and developmental levels of their students.
- To explore the benefits of continuing professional development (CPD).
- To develop students' presentation skills.
- To help the students to be familiarised with the job interview process.

mapping techniques. Hands-on exercises and field demonstrations allowed participants to gain practical experience in drone operations, data processing, and GIS mapping. By the end of the workshop, participants were equipped with the necessary skills to utilise drones for surveying purposes and effectively process and analyse the acquired data for GIS mapping applications.

Through the use of geospatial technology which permits autonomous flight, GIS mapping, terrain, and visualization can provide accurate data collection in taking photos of jobs sites across the world.

GIS, or geographic information systems, have long allowed sophisticated images to take your team. First, capturing software and new spatial technologies have given drones the ability to capture more data over larger land areas. In addition, a drone's unparalleled ability to fly at various heights allows users to view their terrain or forest from multiple angles. It is superior surveying images with 90-degree vertical accuracy and such images require less time and resources than traditional. And with the large amount of aerial in the images, digital processing, generating results in, enhancing and its great benefits for GIS of about high resolution. Finally, such drones, with autonomous flight typically takes just a few hours, rather than weeks or months for traditional aerial mapping methods such as balloons, planes, or manned survey teams. The history for the GIS is that dramatically less drone use requires in detail, can be captured more frequently and better, and real time to produce.
